

What lies beneath?

Mixed media rendered section visual of experience within the Megatron 'Cathedral'

Climate change is the symptom of failure

of our ability to govern ourselves.

Indy Johar

CONCEPT

A multi-sensory, multi-dimensional experience journeying below the surface-level of Sheffield City centre into what lies beneath - a series of arched river culverts, known as the Megatron.

Born out of an interplay of ideas relating to the causes of disconnection between man and his environment it intends to evoke a deep transitional journey into the human psyche, providing portals of access to realisations and profound learnings of interrelation and interdependence.

In some way or other, the human race has to learn how to leave the world alone and let what is called the natural homeostasis, that is the self-balancing process of nature, take care of the mess.

Now how are going to do that?

Sectional drawing through megatron with lyrics from sound piece transcribed and superimposed.

Passing from daylight into the darkness, the actants become a part of the navigation system, with their subtly lit helmets guiding each other's footsteps as they tread along the makeshift wooden platforms that elevate them above the River Sheaf running below.

The sound piece provides a 23 minute, real-time sonic render - a montage of field recordings, rhythms and music, interspersed with vocal commentaries related to man and climate.

The sound piece provides the physical conditions for a transcendence from the outer, material world, into the inner, immaterial world.

An array of emotions may be triggered, reaching the climatic point at the Megatron Cathedral, where a portal of natural light presents itself in the distance.

The sound piece gradually fades and allows the sounds of the present environment to return, permitting a slow re-connection with the material surroundings and preparing for the moment of resurgence.

The actants are invited to make their own journey back the way they came with the natural light from the entrance highlighting the materiality of the spaces that perhaps were previously unseen.

Life is a series of mini resurrections [...] of collapses into the chaotic underworld; where you learn something profound and when you come back out, you're more than you were when you went in.
